"Indoctrinate U" on the Documentary Channel

I thought you would be interested in this movie from the classical liberal Moving Picture Institute about political correctness on college campuses. It's funny and disturbing at the same time. It shows aspects of college life that can be shocking to anyone who hasn't read the detail of what goes on under the regime of political correctness and group identity politics.

The Documentary Channel is showing it this week. I've given times and dates below, with a bit more information. See my note about Bill Ayers at the end of the newsletter.

Regards,

Maisha

ALSO: AN "INDOCTRINATE U" DELETED SCENE ABOUT BILL AYERS

A man named Bill Ayers has been in the news lately as Senator Barack Obama's connections to the 1960s-era domestic terrorist have become an issue in the presidential campaign.

In a scene deleted from an earlier edit of "Indoctrinate U," we tell the story of how 1960s campus radicals morphed into today's academics.

Three of those radicals were Ayers, his now-wife Bernardine Dohrn, and Mark Rudd. Together, they led the Weather Underground, a group committed to the violent overthrow the U.S. Government.

To bring about their hoped-for communist utopia, the Weathermen bombed dozens of targets around the country including the U.S. Capitol, the Pentagon and military recruiting stations. The Weathermen murdered two police officers and a security guard while robbing an armored car. They targeted the families of judges, celebrated the Manson murders, and through legal technicalities, most of them avoided jail.

Decades later, they're still unapologetic. In an interview published on September 11th, 2001, Ayers told The New York Times, "I don't regret setting bombs. I feel we didn't do enough."

What does all of this have to do with higher education? Watch the video to find out.

MPI's memo ends there, but I have to add these facts: Ayers and Dohrn married. Ayers father was wealthy, powerful Thomas Ayers, head of Chicago's ComEd and a close friend of Richard J. Daley, then long-time powerful mayor of Chicago. Many believe his connections helped them get let off easy from their crimes.
